(10) CHINA-US: Interest in Antitank Missile

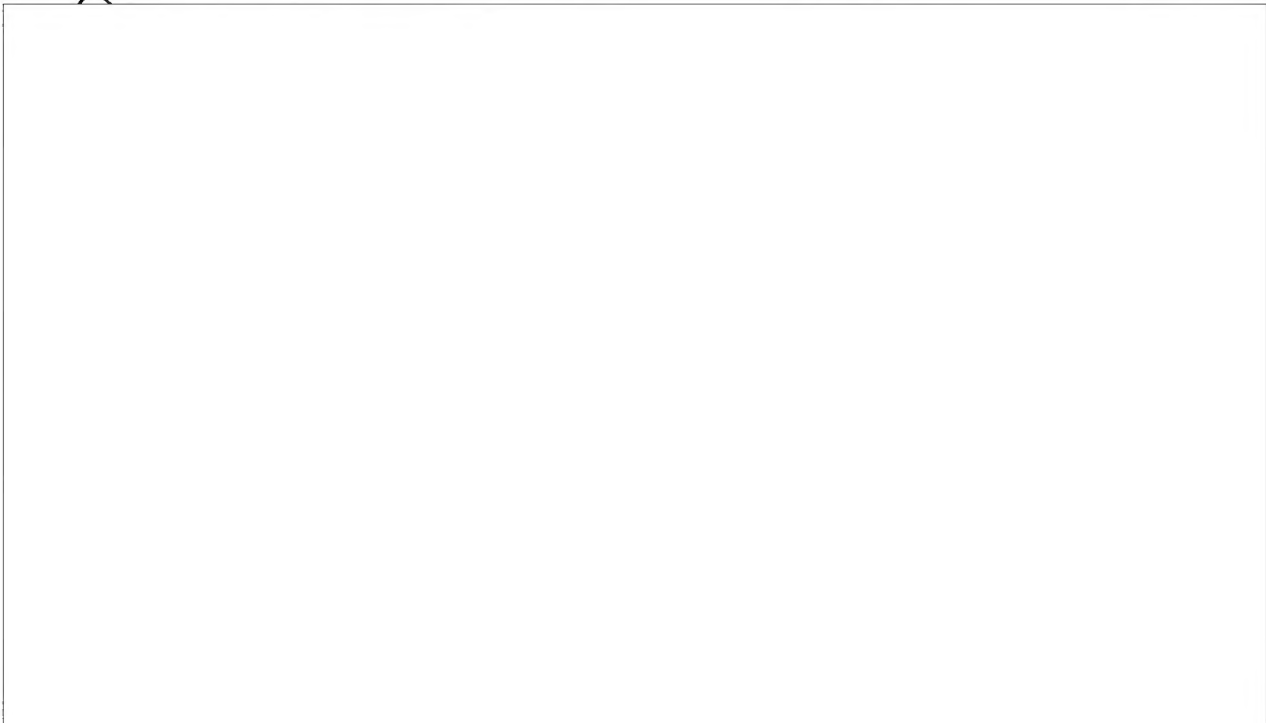

An official of China's primary arms import-export firm has informed the US Embassy that China is interested in purchasing and coproducing the latest generation of TOW wire-guided antitank missile and asked the Embassy to relay an invitation to the US manufacturer for discussions in Beijing. The official said the decision had been delayed for a month while China "watched the actions of the US."

Comment: Approval to begin the talks almost certainly came from the highest levels in Beijing and indicates that China--following the Sino-US communique in mid-August--has decided to resume probing US willingness to transfer advanced military technology. The newest TOW antitank missile could be particularly effective against the heavily armored T-72 tanks being deployed for the first time with Soviet forces along China's northern border.
